Thank-You Note Starters

For when you're too tired for prose — fill in two blanks and it's a real note

Nobody expects a wedding-quality card for a pot of soup. One specific sentence beats ten generic ones. Pick a starter, fill the blanks, sign it. Done counts.

Openers — choose one

" The _____ you brought on _____ was exactly what we needed."

" You should know that _____ was eaten by _____ with _____ of pure joy."

" I've thought about that _____ every time the day got hard. Thank you for the _____."

" You took a Tuesday off your own plate to feed ours. The _____ didn't go unnoticed — it went fast."

Be specific — one detail makes it warm

" The kids asked for _____ seconds, which never happens."

" We saved the _____ and ate it the night of _____, which was a rough one, and it helped."

" The _____ you left in the cooler carried us through _____."

" You even halved the spice for the kids and labeled everything — I can't tell you how much it meant not to think."

Close gently — no pressure, small promises

" We'd love to return the favor someday — when you're ready, dinner's ours: _____."

" I'm too tired for fancy words, but please know we noticed everything. Love, _____."

" Next time you have a hard week, dinner from us is already promised. I mean it: _____."

Bookkeeping corner

Sent thank-you to	Date	How (text / card / in person)

> A photo text is a legitimate thank-you: half-eaten pan, messy table, one sentence — "your thing did not survive the night." People who cook for others live for that photo.